position of manager of Mr. W. C. B. Rathbun's new paper, the Napanee road adjoining
Mr. Butler's cricket club has been formed for the west end. They organized by electing Fred Knight, Captain, Hugo Craig, Stacy Pease, and Hubert Nasmith, Heavy Batter.

Baron Dowse, the joking Irish judge who died the other day, once told an American Irishman that he had a small career in Ireland when one said, funny things people would do to a man, and that made life worth living.

Shannonville Fair.

The Board of Directors of the Tyndalga Agricultural Society at a meeting held on Tuesday decided to hold the annual exhibition at Shannonville on Wednesday, Oct 1st, 1890.

be in aid of Conference Claims and Superannuation Fund.

Church of the Redeemer.

The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper will be dispensed at the morning service in the Church of the Redeemer next Sabbath, 9th inst. Special services were held on Wednesday and Thursday evenings of this week.

Rev. A. Young, of Napanee, will conduct the usual preparatory service this (Friday) evening at 7:30 p. m. On Sabbath evening a special service of song "King Forever" will be rendered. All are cordially invited.

Rifle Match.

On Friday, March 21st, a number of our local sports indulged in a friendly shooting match, the two teams being captained
by M. Woodcock and Wm. Powles, respectively. The range was 200 yards. Woodcock's team won by 14 points. The score is as follows:—M. Woodcock 19, Thos. Gould 16, E. S. Glasford 10, P. McCann 15, total
60; W. Powles 5, J. C. Hampton 12, W.
Stuart 14, J. Stuart 12, total 46.

Canoe and Boating Club.

The annual meeting of the Deseronto
Canoe and Boating Club was held last Friday evening. There was a good attendance. Capt. F. S. Rathbun presided.
Purser Nasmith read the minutes of the preceding meeting which were approved.

The reports showed the financial condition and a snug surplus in the treasury.
After discussion it was agreed to take steps toward the erection of a club house and a committee was appointed to make a canvass of the membership to discover what amount of stock would be subscribed towards this undertaking, and report at an early meeting.

Military Opening.

Mrs. Dalton, as will be seen by advt., announces her spring millinery opening which will be held on Saturday, 5th, and the following week. A visit to her rooms show that her display of fashionable millinery is of a large scale, exceeding those of former years. All the latest styles and novelties may be inspected. Mrs.
Dalton has also received heavy importations
of dry goods, including a splendid assortment of lace trimmings of the most fashionable kind, a very rare collection indeed. She extends a cordial invitation to the ladies of Deseronto and the district.

Band Concert.

The programme for the concert and entertainment under the auspices of the Citizens' Band to be held in Union Hall, next Tuesday evening, 8th inst, has been issued.

As the band is in store for the most loving public. All the best available talent has been secured and success is placed beyond a doubt. The programme is so appealing as to give the Band a helping hand and it is gratifying to learn that the tickets, which are only 25 cents, are selling fast. You can reserve your seats at Eggar's and Malley's, and this, if you wish,
should be done to-day or to-morrow.

The Big Drum.

Capt. Wm. Cardiff, who has been suffering from the effects of a gripe has been for a few weeks to Toronto to enjoy a well earned rest, and Lieut. Wm. Davidson is now in command of the local corps of the Salvation Army. The morning service is interesting and the attendance is increasing.
Interesting children's meetings are held on Thursday at 4:30 p. m., Saturday at 3 p. m., and Sunday at 10 a. m. A large number of children attend all these assemblies. Meetings will be held in the barracks to-day, Friday, at 3 and 8 p. m., to which all are invited. The morning service is very interesting and the attendance is increasing.
The various selections by the Malloy family were all well rendered,
and proved that this gifted family have been giving constant attention to the divine
art, since their removal from Deseronto.

Messrs. N. V. Malloy and C. Malloy maintained their reputation on the corner, and Mr. F. Malloy's trombone solos were much appreciated. A piano and violin duet by Miss Malloy and Mr. C. Malloy was well executed. The very artistic performance on the violin by Mr. Malloy were loudly applauded. Miss Shaw delighted the audience by her vocal solos, which were given with much feeling and were directly successful. Mr. Balfour in his vocal solos also produced a favorable impression. Miss Walker kindly assisted by playing the piano to the accompaniment of the vocal solos. It is not improbable that Deseronto may be favored again by a visit from this excellent company.

Methodist Sunday School.

The regular quarterly review was held in the Methodist Sabbath School last Sunday,
the exercises being of a very interesting character. The following is a brief summary of the work of the quarter by this flourishing school:—Number of verses learned, 10,028; number of teachers, 22;
other workers, 5; total membership, 429;
collections for school purposes, $41.08. On the first Sunday in January the members of the S. Aid and Extension Fund, $3.44. On the same day the members of the S. Aid and Extension Fund, $3.44. On the same day
the school promised to keep up in their power to raise the membership to 400 by Christmas, 1890. As an inducement to greater effort the Librarian of the school offered a prize to the person who should bring the greatest number of pupils during the quarter. This was awarded to Mrs. E. W.
Washburn, who succeeded in bringing in twenty two new scholars. Eighty new pupils were enrolled during three months.
Many the members believe that the membership will be 500 by next Christmas.
Rev. A. Campbell and Supt. Richardson
must be congratulated on this success.

Deseronto and Sugar Social.

Deseronto Concert, Royal Templars, will hold a concert and sugar social on the evening of Friday, 11th inst. The programme will comprise all previous efforts.
Not only will there be a fine band, but distributed, but there will be four amusing and instructional dialogues and a pantomime, "The Hungry Chinese." There will be two gorgeous tableaux and several solo recitations, &c. The councils of Shannonville and Napanee will assist. The performance will commence at 7:30 sharp. All the instruction and fun can be secured for 15 cents the price of a ticket.

Do not fail to witness the grand spectacular scenes
in the two tableaux at Union Hall, Friday 11th
inst.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.—Are you disturbed
at night and broken of your rest by a sick child suffering and crying with pain of cutting teeth? If so send at once and get a bottle of "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for Children Teething." Its value is incalculable. It will relieve the poor little sufferer immediately. Depend upon it, mothers; there is no mistake about it. It lends strength and builds up the system.
The Stomach and Bowels, cures Wind Colic
softens the Gums, reduces inflammation,
and gives rest and energy to the whole system. "Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for children teething is pleasant to the taste and is the prescription of one of the oldest and best female physicians and nurses in the United States, and is for sale by all druggis-tists throughout the world. Price twenty-five cents a bottle. Be sure and ask for
"MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP."

The selections by the Citizens'
Band next Tuesday evening will show what progress has been made during the past winter by that organization.

THE SECRET OF A SCREEN.

"Phyllis!"
 "Yes, auntie."
 "Mrs. Van Roosevelt was here again to-day."
 The girl buying herself around the little kitchen paused at the words.

"About the screen, auntie?" she asked, wistfully.

"About the screen, my love."
 "And she offered?"
 "Seventy-five dollars this time."
 "And, rather hopelessly, 'yes.'"
 "I refused it, dear!" very promptly and proudly.

Phyllis pressed her red lips very tightly together.

How she wished her aunt would set the article in question! They were so very poor. Her salary as teacher in the village school barely paid for their necessities, and she did so long to be able to spend a few dollars foolishly on the things she loved.

She was a pretty girl—an extraordinary pretty girl. Her slender but well rounded form was most attractively and charmingly graceful, and the face, with its smooth, broad brow, its sunbright hair, its short, arch features, its delicate coloring and dreamy, violet eyes, denoted a latter generation of the phœnix's exquisite than the faded and mended old blue casement which she wore.

"But, auntie, all your other old housewifery went long ago to try to break with her for both—went in the time before I was old enough to earn the little I do. Why do you prize this so much more highly than the rest?"

The small, withered old lady, dressed in black alpaca, with a neat headcloth crossed over her brow, ceased her slow nocking and looked up into the questioning young face.

"I'm keeping it to give you for a wedding present."

"That is very kind of you, auntie, but indeed I would rather have you sell it and enjoy some comfort now."

Mrs. Merritt's little brown bird-like eyes twinkled slyly.

"I would if I were offered enough for it."

"But," cried Phyllis, stopping in the act of filling the tea kettle, "seventy-five dollars, auntie!"

"Seventy-five dollars can't touch it!" declared the old lady, with asperity.

It was quite useless to argue with her aunt when she got the wind up in her head.

As the girl washed the supper dishes and tidied up the tiny breakfast table, with its dining room and kitchen, and which, with two other apartments, formed their whole establishment, she recalled many of the old stories to which she had listened with such interest.

A peculiar character every one seemed to consider her—demented, many intimated. Certain it was that one episode related of her seemed to justify the consideration.

Very wealthy in her own right was she when she had married a handsome adventurer named Oswald Merritt. She had converted all her property into money, invested the money in bonds, and then made a bonfire of the bonds! Her jewels disappeared, no one knew where, and she subsided into the poverty of her husband's life, and believed a husband should solely support his wife.

But a test so severe Oswald Merritt could not stand, and he died. Infatuated with the bride's deed and doctrine, he told her he no longer married her for her money, and took himself off.

For some, worthless, dissipated, he hung around the neighborhood, seeking reconciliation with his wife, but ever to her proving a persistent and malicious menace.

"I've had enough of this!" she learned one day he had fallen out of a third story window and broken his neck.

His widow devoted herself to the care of her brother's orphan child, Phyllis Clyde, and till the latter was of an age to work, had supported them both by nursing, doing plain sewing, and occasionally selling a bit of her antique furniture or old family silver. Now the only relic left was the fine screen, with which Mrs. Merritt so stubbornly refused to part.

That night, when she had given her aunt her regular cup of cocoa and tucked her snugly away in bed, Phyllis went into the box of a parlor and stood before the screen in question.

"Worth more than seventy-five dollars, indeed!" she murmured, disgustedly. "That clumsy, ugly, useless old thing! But then it is just the articles which are ugly, clumsy and useless that rich people seem to run crazy after nowadays."

It was oval in shape, bound in dark silver and swung in a slender frame of black mahogany. The back—there was a couple of inches deep—was of paper mache, the front, a queer jumble of applied pictures in oil, India ink and water colors, all being protected from the dust by glass.

The following day was Saturday, and Phyllis, in her best gown, a pretty, soft rose and white challs, set off for the Van Roosevelt's, where she was engaged to instruct tri-weekly the younger children in music.

Quite the show place of the neighborhood was the Van Roosevelt place. Built in the most elaborate style of modern architecture, it was surrounded by conservatories, orchid houses, and terraces of every value.

Phyllis was endeavoring to make the most diminutive Miss Van Roosevelt comprehend the difference between a crocheted and a quiver, when Archie came into the room.

Archie was the Van Roosevelt's eldest son, their pride and heir. And Archie was most tremendously in love with Phyllis Clyde. This, to the girl's decided embarrassment and consternation. Not that she didn't like Archie—one couldn't help that, so cruel, and kind, and handsome, and honorable was he—but Phyllis felt that his path lay in a widely different world, and that she would be more content with her present existence if she were barred out from it than the dreams which never, never could culminate in realization. So that was why she gave him now the nervous nod of recognition when he entered the music room.

To half a dozen random remarks she made no reply. He tried the strategy of question. "My mother went to see your aunt yesterday, didn't she?"

"Yes."

"About that curious screen?"

"Yes."

"Why won't she sell it? My mother has her heart set on securing it."

Phyllis looked up and laughed.

"She says she is keeping it for a wedding gift for me."

"Phyllis!"

"Well—one, two, three, Basile!"

"Oh, infinitely thank you, my dear!" cried Archie, in exasperation, as he flung out of the room.

BUT HE MANAGED TO MEET PHYLLIS HER WAY.

"Phyllis," he said, "I've thought of a great scheme. Marry me!"

"You've said that before," with a shake of her head.

"Yes, but about the screen, you know. We'll give it to mother as a peace offering when you are her daughter-in-law."

Phyllis laughed merrily. But she was absolutely unrelenting.

"No, no, no, Archie!"

"I shan't take no for an answer!" avowed the young fellow, stoutly.

"You must!"

"That is a nice way to contradict a lady!" reproved Phyllis, with great evidence of indignation, and at her breast a warm, glad thrill.

That evening Archie presented himself at the door of Mrs. Merritt's domicile.

Regardless of his sweetheart's protest, he marched boldly in to see her aunt.

He quite dwarfed the little parlor and its furniture.

The wrinkled old lady in the window looked at him in amazement.

"Mrs. Merritt, I presume!" he said, standing, hat in hand, before her. "I'm Archie Van Roosevelt, and I want to marry Phyllis, if she will accept a man who has to depend on his brain and hands for a living."

"But your father and mother?"

"Have deserted me."

"For wanting to marry Phyllis?"

"Yes."

"Then I shan't!" began the girl, promptly.

"Oh, yes," in a voice both coaxing and confident, "yes, you will, Phyllis!"

Mrs. Merritt turned her glinting eyes on her niece.

"You better," she advised dryly. "You won't find such a lover every day. Look at my luck!"

The remark was effective. The eyes of the young people met, and out of each soft cheek of Phyllis Clyde glowed a bright flag of surrender.

The following day Archie Van Roosevelt went to the city and secured work, and Phyllis received a note from his mother, despatching her to the city.

Archie worked hard and saved every cent he could, and Phyllis, half regretful that she had made such a sacrifice as his necessary, and wholly glad of his loyal love, counted the weeks till she should see him again.

It was in September that he came back—golden, fragrant, delicious September. Very quiet was their wedding. And Phyllis, in her simple, snowy wedding gown, looked more radiant and lovely than ever.

Just as soon as the cottage could be disposed of Mrs. Merritt was to go to the city to live with the young couple.

When the sacred ceremony was over, the little widow said, briefly:

"Now, Phyllis, I'm going to give you the present I promised."

"The screen, auntie?"

"Yes, dear."

She took a tiny key from her bosom—went toward the heirloom.

Does it seem to you that Phyllis Van Roosevelt, in amazement,

Mrs. Merritt smiled.

In the heart of a paper mache rose she had concealed the key. The whole back of the screen opened like a door, and down came tumbling on the carpet folded papers and heavy little packages wrapped in tissue paper.

"Bonds!" explained the eccentric widow, briefly. "The bonds I told Oswald Merritt I had burned, just to test his affection. And my jewels—the old Clyde jewels. They are yours now, my dear—yours and Archie's. I was bound you shouldn't be married for your money, as I was. There is fifteen thousand dollars there, Phyllis, not to mention the stones."

"Jupiter!" cried Archie.

"Oh," gasped the bride, "it sounds like a fairy tale!"

But it wasn't. It was every dollar as true as it was delightful.

"Now," declared Mrs. Merritt. "You know why I said I never was offered enough for that screen?"

When she joined them in their charming honeymoon, she had covered them with the blessed magic of her fortunes.

"I've heard Archie's mother is heartbroken over her quarrel with him, Phyllis. You see, she's a very good woman, and she loves him."

The bride took her advice. The result of the gift was a visit from Archie's parents and their proud acceptance of their lovely daughter.

"Whoever would have thought," queried Phyllis, ecstatically, "that this old screen held such a secret! But beautiful things do happen out of the blue!"

"Kate M. Kearney in Philadelphia Saturday Night."

THE SECRET OF A SCREEN.

"Phyllis!"
 "Yes, auntie."
 "Mrs. Van Roosevelt was here again to-day."
 The girl buying herself around the little kitchen paused at the words.

"About the screen, auntie?" she asked, wistfully.

"About the screen, my love."
 "And she offered?"
 "Seventy-five dollars this time."
 "And, rather hopelessly, 'yes.'"
 "I refused it, dear!" very promptly and proudly.

Phyllis pressed her red lips very tightly together.

How she wished her aunt would set the article in question! They were so very poor. Her salary as teacher in the village school barely paid for their necessities, and she did so long to be able to spend a few dollars foolishly on the things she loved.

She was a pretty girl—an extraordinary pretty girl. Her slender but well rounded form was most attractively and charmingly graceful, and the face, with its smooth, broad brow, its sunbright hair, its short, arch features, its delicate coloring and dreamy, violet eyes, denoted a latter generation of the phœnix's exquisite than the faded and mended old blue casement which she wore.

"But, auntie, all your other old housewifery went long ago to try to break with her for both—went in the time before I was old enough to earn the little I do. Why do you prize this so much more highly than the rest?"

The small, withered old lady, dressed in black alpaca, with a neat headcloth crossed over her brow, ceased her slow nocking and looked up into the questioning young face.

"I'm keeping it to give you for a wedding present."

"That is very kind of you, auntie, but indeed I would rather have you sell it and enjoy some comfort now."

Mrs. Merritt's little brown bird-like eyes twinkled slyly.

"I would if I were offered enough for it."

"But," cried Phyllis, stopping in the act of filling the tea kettle, "seventy-five dollars, auntie!"

"Seventy-five dollars can't touch it!" declared the old lady, with asperity.

It was quite useless to argue with her aunt when she got the wind up in her head.

As the girl washed the supper dishes and tidied up the tiny breakfast table, with its dining room and kitchen, and which, with two other apartments, formed their whole establishment, she recalled many of the old stories to which she had listened with such interest.

A peculiar character every one seemed to consider her—demented, many intimated. Certain it was that one episode related of her seemed to justify the consideration.

Very wealthy in her own right was she when she had married a handsome adventurer named Oswald Merritt. She had converted all her property into money, invested the money in bonds, and then made a bonfire of the bonds! Her jewels disappeared, no one knew where, and she subsided into the poverty of her husband's life, and believed a husband should solely support his wife.

But a test so severe Oswald Merritt could not stand, and he died. Infatuated with the bride's deed and doctrine, he told her he no longer married her for her money, and took himself off.

For some, worthless, dissipated, he hung around the neighborhood, seeking reconciliation with his wife, but ever to her proving a persistent and malicious menace.

"I've had enough of this!" she learned one day he had fallen out of a third story window and broken his neck.

His widow devoted herself to the care of her brother's orphan child, Phyllis Clyde, and till the latter was of an age to work, had supported them both by nursing, doing plain sewing, and occasionally selling a bit of her antique furniture or old family silver. Now the only relic left was the fine screen, with which Mrs. Merritt so stubbornly refused to part.

That night, when she had given her aunt her regular cup of cocoa and tucked her snugly away in bed, Phyllis went into the box of a parlor and stood before the screen in question.

"Worth more than seventy-five dollars, indeed!" she murmured, disgustedly. "That clumsy, ugly, useless old thing! But then it is just the articles which are ugly, clumsy and useless that rich people seem to run crazy after nowadays."

It was oval in shape, bound in dark silver and swung in a slender frame of black mahogany. The back—there was a couple of inches deep—was of paper mache, the front, a queer jumble of applied pictures in oil, India ink and water colors, all being protected from the dust by glass.

The following day was Saturday, and Phyllis, in her best gown, a pretty, soft rose and white challs, set off for the Van Roosevelt's, where she was engaged to instruct tri-weekly the younger children in music.

Quite the show place of the neighborhood was the Van Roosevelt place. Built in the most elaborate style of modern architecture, it was surrounded by conservatories, orchid houses, and terraces of every value.

Phyllis was endeavoring to make the most diminutive Miss Van Roosevelt comprehend the difference between a crocheted and a quiver, when Archie came into the room.

Archie was the Van Roosevelt's eldest son, their pride and heir. And Archie was most tremendously in love with Phyllis Clyde. This, to the girl's decided embarrassment and consternation. Not that she didn't like Archie—one couldn't help that, so cruel, and kind, and handsome, and honorable was he—but Phyllis felt that his path lay in a widely different world, and that she would be more content with her present existence if she were barred out from it than the dreams which never, never could culminate in realization. So that was why she gave him now the nervous nod of recognition when he entered the music room.

"Phyllis!"

"Well—one, two, three, Basile!"

"Oh, infinitely thank you, my dear!" cried Archie, in exasperation, as he flung out of the room.

A STRANGE TRUE STORY.

A Wounded Pauper Dies in a Hospital and Proves to Be a Millionaire.

The keeper of the lodging room for vagrants in the Fourth Precinct station house reported at the hospital late one black night in winter that one of their lodgers, a now comatose, very ill. The man was brought to the hospital in an ambulance, and the following history of his case was placed upon our records:

Thomas Hunn, aged 47, residence Yorkers, Wadsworth, born in Ireland. Had lived in the United States thirty-nine years. Painter. No friends. Complaints of pain in left hypochondria and in umbilical region. Says he was kicked in the abdomen at 10 p. m. the day before by an unknown man on Cherry street. He is of medium height and weight and dark complexion. Dressed in dark blue sack coat and trousers, with blue flannel shirt, heavy shoes and woolen socks. Clothing evidently new and of quality worn by laboring man for holiday dress. No external sign of injury. Pulse and temperature normal.

I had the man put to bed and ordered an opiate for him, under which his pain disappeared and he fell asleep.

The following morning his general condition was good, and, as our beds were in demand, I decided to have him transferred to another hospital. He wished to dress himself for the ride, and as he sat up he had to do some of his clothing, he suddenly expired.

I rushed to his side, but before I could reach him the spark of life had gone out. He died without a groan.

The autopsy held by the coroner revealed an injury to the internal organs sufficient to cause death. He had doubtless been kicked some days previous to his death, and had not realized the serious nature of the blow.

As we had no address for him, we could find his relatives or acquaintances, we were obliged to give a minute description of him to the newspapers. No news resulting from this advertisement, his body was sent to the morgue.

A few days later a man called at the hospital and asked to see the house surgeon. I saw him at the time, and he himself himself meanly in looking over our "Reporters' Book" a volume kept for the benefit of newspaper men. When I asked him he had the book open at the entry relating to Thomas Hunn. I at once recognized him as a private detective.

"What do you know about Thomas Hunn?" he asked.

"Very little. What you read there is the extent of my knowledge," I replied.

"I am looking for a gentleman who disappeared recently from an uptown hotel. His case is mysterious. When I read the newspaper account of Hunn I became curious regarding him."

"But Hunn was a workman. He had nothing of the gentleman about him."

KINGSFORD.

From Our Own Correspondent.

[Too late for last week.]
Mr. Charles Bennett of Read has rented
Mr. Daniel Griffin's farm 5th con., [Trending] for a term of five years and moved this week.

Mr. Daniel Griffin and his brothers and Miss Mary Griffin left for Belleville on Tuesday.

Mr. William Mitchell McCullough left for Havelock last week.

A heavy snowstorm set in from the east, on Friday, with a heavy fall of snow on Saturday.
The weather has again turned mild.

The lawsuit of McGinness and Asselstine, arising out of the recent runaway of Mr.
Asselstine's team at Robin bridge has been settled. Mr. Asselstine paying $100 for damages.

Mrs. Reuben Schermerhorn still continues very ill.

Next Monday the Richmond council hold their regular meeting.

Letters have lately been received from Mr.
John Nelson Hewitt, who resides near Carman, Manitoba. He owns 160 acres of land there, which he has prepared to crop this spring
and upon which he is now erecting buildings.

Mr. William Sampson has returned from Watkinsburg, N.Y., on a visit to the homestead.

The new American Trifft and our own Budget are causing considerable interest in the community, especially among the farmers.

Services in the churches on Easter Sunday:
St. Patrick's, 9:30; St. Jude's, 2:30.

Mr. Samuel Anderson is very low.

The Literary Society at Emory Hill realized $25 by a Maple Sugar Social.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles O'Rea and Mr.
James O'Rea left for Battle Creek, Michigan, on Tuesday, where they intend to make their future home.

Mr. Thomas Dufosse and family and Mr.
Haynes and family of Selby, have moved on the McGreer property, known as the Emory Hill farm. Mr. James Brickley of Marysville, has been lately visiting our village and some one hopes to see him again.

Mr. Albert Wagner of Emory Hill, is very low and not expected to recover.

Miss Jennie Brennan of Alton is visiting her sister Mrs. Thomas F. Sewmuth.

Mrs. James Jernan, of Marysville, has returned home.

Mr. Oliver Krasne, who has for some time been troubled with a cancer on his lower lip,
had it removed last week, in Belleville.

The operation was skillfully performed by Dr.
Gibson, assisted by Dr. Murphy and Dr.
Clinton.

ERINSVILLE.

From Our Own Correspondent.

Mr. Editor, will you please give space for a few notes from this generally quiet village.

Since the opening of the new road and the establishing of a station here, business has been quite lively notwithstanding the existing dull times.

Mr. T. F. Hodge, agent for James Ricardson & Sons, Kingston, has bought a large quantity of all kinds of grain here this winter
also has Mr. W. H. Hodge, of Kingston.

Keen opinion has been kept up between those two rival firms in the grain trade to the benefit of the farmers of the vicinity.

On Tuesday, April 9, a lively election took place here for the choosing of a councilman. Messrs. Kearns and York were the candidates. Excitement ran high all the day and when about seven o'clock news was received that Kearns was elected the boys of the village gave vent to their feelings by a large bonfire composed of coal-oil and other material amounting to about twenty five dollars.

The Rathbone Company have arranged to sell salt, flour, lumber, coal &c., through their agent, J. M. Kearney.

Miss Mary Campbell and Miss Evelyn Nevills, who have been visiting friends in this vicinity, have returned home to Napanea.

Miss Harriette Stewart, of Clinton, spent a few days visiting friends here.

Mrs. N. Pheasant visited Kingston last week.
The family of Mr. Hugh McKiver, section foreman, have moved here.

Mr. Palmatier is making preparations to improve "Lake View" hotel.

Frederick was commended and some of the boys do occasionally catch a pike.

TYNDINAGA RESERVE

From Our Own Correspondent.

The Mohawks have land for sale north of the York Road with a few small woods, and until that is sold, are not prepared to cede the block west. The "angry disgust" of the inhabitants will not hasten the matter; though an Indian will not accomplish anything.

The Good Friday services were well attended at both churches. There is no need for so much worry about the agency. Mr. Hill is preparing his corn ground, and will not leave at the earliest until after the old Mohawk festival held in the fall, known as the "Corn Dance."

Easter Day services were bright and hearty.
The Rev. A. L. Green kindly assisted the missionary, who is still suffering from bronchitis. The altar at Christ church was beautifully adorned with cut flowers. There were eighty-one communicants at the celebration. The chance of All Saints' church was decorated with banners and appropriate texts.
A few of three dollars has been charged for the burial of whites in Christ Church Cemetery.

A man on the Slash Road buried his child in the woods last week. The child was a girl.
Further notice of this delinquent will be taken in a short time.

A general council was held on Wednesday to discuss making a grant for the improvement of the old York Road, also to take into consideration the building of a viaduct in a central part of the Reserve. Further report next week.

Twenty-five persons attended the Easter
Monday service held in the parish church.
The finances were in a flourishing condition, a large balance being on hand from the sale of the land. The Rev. A. L. Green Alexander Loft and William G. Maracle are the church wardens of Christ church for the year ending on the 31st of March.

Chief Solomon Loft, who had served the parish for three years as delegate to the synod, was unanimously re-elected.

Chief Kogutshah has sent a friend his card, from which we learn he has entered into partnership with his brother, Prince "Neokla-shah," in the only genuine medicine woman living of the name.

the famous Mohawk tribe of Indians," and opened an office for the "cure of all diseases"
in Canton, Ohio. All other Indian doctors must take a back seat whilst Prince Jesse and his Princess sister can be consulted.

The web wire fence in front of Christ Church Cemetery will be painted immediately.
The whole yard will shortly be enclosed with a substantial wire fence.

WESTBROOK.

The saw mill which has stood so long silent,
is again in operation, and giving the village
the appearance of a busy place, and affords considerable sport for the young boys of the vicinity.

The sugar festival held in the C. M. church on Tuesday, 1st inst., was largely attended,
over $20 being realized.

Mrs. H. Bell is very sick, and very little hope is entertained of her recovery.

William Wilborne, of Bay Shore, was calling on Sunday last in this vicinity.

Mrs. Doretta Telgman and Miss McDonald, spent last week at Maple Lawn.

Sidney Alport and his sister Mary have gone to Rochester to reside permanently.

Visitors—Mr. Mahoney, from Wolfe Island;
Miss Newman, of Kingston; Mr. Johnson, Odessa.

THE MOHAWK RESERVE EASTER
VESTRY MEETING.

The Annual Vestry Meeting was held on Easter Monday evening at Christ Church.
There were 25 members present. At 10:30
the Missionary opened the meeting with prayer, after which the business of the day was commenced by appointing John A. Loft secretary. The minutes of last year's meeting were approved and adopted. The report of the wardens was very satisfactory, showing a large balance in the hands of the retiring church wardens who were congratulated on the state of the finances. It has been the rule of the missionary to change the vestry and harmonize
the wardens every year in order to create an interest in church work. Alexander Loft, of Christ Church, was appointed warden of Christ Church and John A. Loft, of the same church, was appointed warden of the Mohawk Reserve.

William George Maracle and Francis Claus were elected by the Vestry, Wardens of Christ Church and All Saints respectively.

Considerable indignation was expressed at the non payment of a small burial fee of three dollars by a white man residing on the Reserve.

There being a lay delegate to appoint in place of Chief Solomon Loft, whose term of office terminated, he was re-elected for three years. The delegates to the Diocesan Synod are: Solomon Loft for three years; Jacob B.
Brant for two years and Sampson Green for one year. After a pleasant and harmonious talk over the affairs of the church on the Reserve the meeting was closed with prayer at 11:15 which terminated the Easter Vestry of 1890
on the Tyndinaga Reservation.

DYNAMITERS AT WORK.

BELEVILLE, April 8.—Particulars were to day received of a villainous act which was perpetrated on Saturday night at Downey's Rapid, in the township of Hungerford, near Belleville. The act was the blowing up of a mill at the place, of which George McIntyre is owner, and his own mill, and near which he lives in a frame house with his wife and seven children. At about 9:30 on the night in question, shortly after the family had retired to bed, they were startled by a loud explosion, which was followed by a crash, and in a most violent manner. Some of the occupants were thrown from their beds,
and the furniture was tossed about in all directions. On going to investigate, Mr.
McIntyre found that a cartridge of dynamite
or some other explosive had been exploded under one end of the house, which placed the building was demolished and the timbers scattered about. Strangely, and most fortunately, not one of the nine inmates of the dwelling was hurt or injured. It is reported that a man was seen to run away from the vicinity of the building immediately after the explosion. An investigation will be held before the local magistrate at Twined.

INITIATING A PRINCE.

The Abend Post, a leading German newspaper of Philadelphia, Penn., gives an interesting account of the coronation of Prince Frederick Leopold in the Masonic Order. A son of Prince Frederick Charles, and a cousin of the Emperor, he received the three grades at once, and became a Mason. At his special request, he joined the lowest lodge of the Grand National Lodge, Frederick William, at Dawn of Day, which was founded when that Prince, the late Emperor, was initiated in 1854. There were three solemn scenes, as the young Prince passed through the respective stages, with appropriate ceremonies and the prescribed changes of uniform. The earliest members of the Ancient appropriate way. The Grand Master used two historical hammers, one that belonged to Frederick the Great, and the other to the Emperor Wilhelm himself. The Prince himself, who was made a Mason. The Master of the lodge expressed thanks to the Emperor for authorizing the Prince to join the order, and explained the significance of its work. A present was given him, for his bride, of three rings and three roses. The Prince himself said in his first Masonic address, "I have heard such wise and good counsels, and have been received with such a friendly welcome, that it is a pleasure to give thanks for my reception. My noble predecessors, Emperor William I, and Emperor Frederick, have shown me the way to the great goal."

The participation of the Royal House of Prussia and Germany in the Masonic Order is one of its best traditions, and it gives it a share in the wonderful history of the nation and secures for it the respect, confidence and esteem of the people that is in their Emperor and their true rulers of men and worthy to be their leaders.

THINK OF THE RESURRECTION.

Widower (pathetically)—Mrs. Catehew, I love you dearly. Can I persuade you to share my lot?

Widow (sweetly)—Well, no, Mr. Tumany!
Your lot must be lonely. I have buried four wives there already.

HIGH SCHOOL REPORT.

We have been favoured with a pleasant attendance of the Report of Inspector Seach
on his recent visit to the Deseronto High School. As the readers of THE TRIBUNE have been already apprised it is of an encouraging character. We summarise his remarks for the benefit of our readers—

Accommodations—All are ranked first-class with the exception of desks, the department, of course, preferring that each pupil should have a desk to himself. He has graded the school grounds first-class as it is understood they will be put in proper condition during the summer.

Equipment—The Library and Apparatus are graded first-class but he recommends that the former be increased to the value of $250 and that an annual sum be provided to improve both.

Attendance—All the pupils duly attended.
Staff—Legally qualified.

Organization and Discipline—Satisfactory
and first class.

Character of teaching in Different Departments—Satisfactory as far as examined.

Miscellaneous—Refers to several matters
and suggestions applicable to a new school.
General Remarks—The Inspector states that the accommodations of this school are better than those of any other two masters' school and not surpassed by those of any three masters' school in the province, an excellent beginning has been made and both teachers are doing good work. He remarks that the best result is especially to be congratulated on having secured for the headmaster-ship a teacher of Mr. Knight's ability and success.

One August Night in '61.

WILKIE COLLIER'S LAST STORY. PLOT, WRITTEN FOR HIS ORIGINAL SKETCH.

(Copyrighted. All rights reserved.)
CHAPTER II.
LOVE AND WAR.

Half an hour later, Mrs. Armitage and Mrs. Dimmock were alone in the garden, when a lumbering carriage rolled to the gate. Col. Armitage, of the Union army, was the man who alighted. His hair was white enough for seventy years, but his skin was sufficiently ruddy and smooth for fifty; and his age was a fair compromise between the two. He kissed his wife and said, "Your color indicates some sort of emotion, and that is unusual in you." She replied, with perfect equanimity, that a wife ought to be pleasantly agitated on meeting her husband after a separation. "I have come to take you back to Springfield," said he.

Mrs. Armitage was frightened, and she furtively scanned his face for information of the reason; but there was no trace of anything in her tone when she asked if they were to go soon. There was more feeling in the exclamation, "I am glad," after he had said, "Immediately."

"I'm not," said Mrs. Dimmock. The arrival of a carriage was not so common an event as to be uninteresting, and from the house emerged several servants. As they came toward the colonel he hastily said to his wife and Mrs. Dimmock: "Gen. Lyon has arrived at Springfield. There is to be a forward movement. We can't leave you longer in a Confederate household. Hush—they must not hear."

May Willett came out, and Col. Armitage was presented to her. She said, "The arrival of a carriage was not so common an event as to be uninteresting, and from the house emerged several servants. As they came toward the colonel he hastily said to his wife and Mrs. Dimmock: "Gen. Lyon has arrived at Springfield. There is to be a forward movement. We can't leave you longer in a Confederate household. Hush—they must not hear."

Mrs. Armitage hurried the preparations for departure with her, because she hoped to avoid a meeting between her husband and Oliver Tudor. She whispered her purpose to May, who gave aid to its accomplishment.

Col. Armitage went into the house for a glass of water before starting. Mrs. Armitage accompanied him. The two wives were waiting impatiently in the yard, when Oliver Willett and Tudor Bowne scuttled into it together. Mrs. Armitage fled like a coward into the house, Oliver followed her, and she added triumphantly, "They are your words."

"Blot them out and read the rest." She stood with folded arms as passive as a statue. He read, and his face grew red, and the bright light of the moon. "I am free to confess it because I also tell you that I must abjure the passion that makes me irresolute, while I write out my own sentence. I cannot bear to explain to you the reason why we must be separated, but it is absolute, irrevocable, final."

"Why do you come here after that?" she said, still calm.

"I come to learn what the thing is that can part us."

"It will not tell you?"

"Is it the fact that you are a Unionist and I an officer in the Confederate army?"

"No; that is not the reason."

He argued no more, but said, "You puzzle me," as he thrust the paper into a breast pocket. She looked toward the house, as if she thought for the first time of being observed, so absorbed had she been, despite her self-possession.

"Somebody will come," she said. "Go at once. If you were recognized here you might be hurt. I understand the feeling before of him had been caused by her fear for his safety. That was pleasing to his vanity, and allaying to the doubts that had been striking shape in his mind as to whether she did love or not. He clasped her passionately. She did not struggle to escape, but resolved instead on the course that she well knew would be more effective, and which she was surprised she could not now avoid. She said:

"Oh, must I abuse myself before you?"

"I desired you to forget me, or remember me respectfully. You compel me to tell you what it is that must keep us apart. I am a wife."

She was freed instantly. Not that he with intention recoiled from her; but his arms relaxed involuntarily, and he stood with the limpidness of a man who had received a terrible physical as well as mental shock. He gasped out, after a pause:

"A wife, did you say?"

"Yes, wife of the man you thought was my father."

The first definite sentiment that was formed out of the jumbling of ideas in his mind was resentment; and he began: "Your deceit!"

"You will forgive me," she pleaded, in tones as well as in words, "when you know that at the first I had no deliberate thought of seriously deceiving you, when you consider the self-conviction I have suffered, when I tell you that the determination to do as honorable a wife is made at the cost of a breaking heart."

"Drive fast," said Col. Armitage to the negro who held the reins. He added to the woman, "This neighborhood is not over safe for us."

"It is full of peril," said Mrs. Armitage. The journey of ten miles to Springfield was made in the early evening, and it conveyed Col. Armitage and the two ladies direct to the house where he had for a week been provisionally quartered. The town was a hubbub of military occupation. Gen. Lyon meant to advance upon the Confederates next day, and the preparations were confused, for in those early days of the war the operations had little of the precision and orderliness subsequently achieved. Col. Armitage's absence, though brief, had left his duties to accumulate, and he had no time to devote to his resigned wife.

Frivolous Mrs. Dimmock, interested by the hurly-burly, had no thought of the farm house that she had so recently quitted; but Mrs. Armitage wandered away into the garden. She sat on a bench, leaned against the tree that made a back for it, and turned her face toward the bright moon, which had risen just high enough to shine over the wall that lined the garden on that side. Externally she was the placid, cool, young beauty. In her mind, so well hidden by her characteristic self-control as being formed, and not without a struggle, a firm resolution to think no more of Oliver Willett. A noise at the wall startled her, and Oliver leaped over. He stood before her, took off his hat, and bowed low. In entrance to the garden had been rapid and resolute; but now he was hesitant, as though a little confounded by his situation. Mrs. Armitage rose, and looked at him with wonder in her lustrous eyes, as he said:

"What brings you here?"

"You," he answered.

"You are reckless."

"A lover knows no fear."

"But he should not let his own fearlessness be the destruction of the woman he loves."

"What do you mean?"

"Did you get the message that I left for you?"

"Yes, and came with it to its author."

They had spoken so rapidly that their dialogue thus far had been as incoherent as it was exciting to them; yet she maintained by far the most composure, and when he would have grasped her hands she stepped back with a show of displeasure.

"My letter told you," she said, "that you must never see me again—that there was a sufficient reason why we must not meet."

"It told me, too," he said, uncoiled by her calm manner, "that your lips had refused to tell. I had begun to believe that you were heartless, and the sudden knowledge of the truth—that you loved me—was like simulant to an invalid—potent to make the blood throb, the lungs heave, and the brain whirl. What could I do but come to you?"

"Forget it! I wrote anything to encourage your madness. I was thoughtless—I scrawled hurriedly to escape observation. Remember only that I said we must never think of meeting again."

"I know the letter word for word."

He took from a pocket a crumpled sheet of paper that looked like a page torn from a diary; but he scarcely glanced at it as he recited what was pencilled on it.

"It says: 'I have loved you two weeks, and I love you more than I have loved any other man. My situation forbade me to entertain such a sentiment, except for one who was powerless to excite it. You made me love you. I told the writing before her, and added triumphantly, "They are your words."

"Blot them out and read the rest."

She stood with folded arms as passive as a statue. He read, and his face grew red, and the bright light of the moon.

"I am free to confess it because I also tell you that I must abjure the passion that makes me irresolute, while I write out my own sentence. I cannot bear to explain to you the reason why we must be separated, but it is absolute, irrevocable, final."

"Why do you come here after that?" she said, still calm.

"I come to learn what the thing is that can part us."

"It will not tell you?"

"Is it the fact that you are a Unionist and I an officer in the Confederate army?"

"No; that is not the reason."

He argued no more, but said, "You puzzle me," as he thrust the paper into a breast pocket. She looked toward the house, as if she thought for the first time of being observed, so absorbed had she been, despite her self-possession.

"Somebody will come," she said. "Go at once. If you were recognized here you might be hurt. I understand the feeling before of him had been caused by her fear for his safety. That was pleasing to his vanity, and allaying to the doubts that had been striking shape in his mind as to whether she did love or not. He clasped her passionately. She did not struggle to escape, but resolved instead on the course that she well knew would be more effective, and which she was surprised she could not now avoid. She said:

"Oh, must I abuse myself before you?"

"I desired you to forget me, or remember me respectfully. You compel me to tell you what it is that must keep us apart. I am a wife."

She was freed instantly. Not that he with intention recoiled from her; but his arms relaxed involuntarily, and he stood with the limpidness of a man who had received a terrible physical as well as mental shock. He gasped out, after a pause:

"A wife, did you say?"

"Yes, wife of the man you thought was my father."

The first definite sentiment that was formed out of the jumbling of ideas in his mind was resentment; and he began: "Your deceit!"

"You will forgive me," she pleaded, in tones as well as in words, "when you know that at the first I had no deliberate thought of seriously deceiving you, when you consider the self-conviction I have suffered, when I tell you that the determination to do as honorable a wife is made at the cost of a breaking heart."

Her attitude of supplication, her eyes, that he had never before seen to hold tears, her voice, that had never before heard to express passion—these drove the resentment out of his thoughts, and left only the overwhelming knowledge of the reality of her love. Therefore, it is not surprising that he said: "Struggle no more, but go with me now. I will take you away from your unloved husband."

He again put his arms around her, and she partly by force, and partly by her own impulse slid down to her knees. She clung to his hands while she said:

"Don't break my good resolution! Don't use your influence for evil, but sustain me in my honor!"

He lifted her tenderly to her feet and said: "Your rebuke makes me ashamed of myself. Good-by."

"Farewell, and remember that my good repute is in your keeping."

He took her hand respectfully. "I swear," he said, with all the solemnity that could attend a more formal oath, "by the hand that I may never hold again, by my unalterable love, that I will sooner give up my life than this secret."

He started toward the wall, but turned back as though to say something more. He saw her standing rigid and white in the moonlight and people hurriedly approaching. Col. Armitage was at the front of the party, but they were led by a man in the uniform of a sergeant, who pointed and said: "This is an officer in the Confederate army. He is a spy."

"He is Mr. Willett, at whose home I have been a guest," said Mrs. Armitage, with wonderful calmness; but, while she spoke with a steady voice, she leaned against the seat for support.

"Young man," said Col. Armitage, "it will be necessary for you, under the circumstances, to explain your presence here at the headquarters of the Union commander. I hope you can do so satisfactorily."

Oliver said firmly, "I have no explanation to make."

"Gen. Lyon has been warned," Col. Armitage continued, "that a spy would visit these premises to-night to get information as to our plans for to-morrow. I sincerely regret that my wife's friend has rendered himself liable to detection, and I trust that he has not endeavored to use knowledge that he may have gained in social intercourse. Guards, conduct this gentleman to the general."

Oliver thought vaguely of trying to escape, but the grasp of the soldiers was upon him. Then he recollected Mrs. Armitage's letter, and his hand went involuntarily to his breast. She saw the gesture and knew what it meant. She clung to the seat, only by a hard resistance preventing herself from falling into his arms.

Col. Armitage also saw the movement, and said, as Oliver was marched away, "Search him for documents that he may be carrying."

DYING IN HARNESS.

Only a fallen horse, stretched out on the road. Stretched in the broken shafts, and crushed by the heavy load.

Only a fallen horse and a circle of wondering eyes. Watching the frightened teamster guiding the beast to the road.

Hold! for his life is over; no more labor for him; see the poor stock outstretched and the patient eyes grow dim.

See on the friendly stones how peacefully rests his head. Thinking, if dumb beasts think, how good it is to die.

After the burdened journey, how restful it is to lie down.

With the broken shafts and the cruel load, waiting only to die!

Watchers, he died in harness, died in the shafts and straps.

Fell and the great load killed him; one of the day's misdeeds.

One of the passing words marring the city road.

A cold tiling in harness, heedless of cold or good.

Passers, crowding the pathway, staying your steps awhile.

Only dead! Only dead; why should we pause to smile.

At death for a beast of burden? On through the busy street.

That is ever and ever echoing the tread of the hurrying feet!

What was the sign? A symbol to touch the tireless will.

Does he who taught in parables speak in parables still?

The seed on the rock is wasted, on the heedless hearts of men.

That gutter and now and then and now, labor and sleep, and then.

Then for the prize! A crowd in the street of ever echoing tread.

The toll, crushed by the heavy load, is there in his harness dead!

—John Boyle O'Reilly.

Canabal, Dwarfs of the Congo Forest.

Nelson had a curious account to give of the dwarfs of the Congo Forest. He describes them as the ugliest and most depraved specimens of humanity he ever heard of.

"They struck me as the dark and forbidding creatures of a bad nightmare," he said, "rather than as human beings."

"You have heard a bad lot, I tell you. Sometimes we struck a district where they seemed a little less evil, or more confident, and they used to come in swarms to the camp. There, of course, had never seen a white man before."

"The most disgusting thing about them was their filthy, stinking expression. They are cannibals, of course, and it always seemed to me that they came into our camp for the purpose of fattening their eyes on us, as a pack of hungry dogs might gaze longingly at a leg of mutton. They could never look us in the face. I have felt their bawling gaze on me as I sat at my tent door, and the moment that I looked all eyes would instantly be dropped. But I have detected them sizing up the camp, and fairly looking into my clothes."

"It used to make my flesh creep. They used to pay more attention to Jeppson than any of us. We were none of us overburdened with brains; these days, but Jeppson is a plumper build than any of the others, hence his popularity with these filthy cannibals. They admired Jeppson because they saw at a glance that he was well up into more stocks and better rib racks than we others."—Congo New York World.

The four greatest medical centres of the world are London, Paris, Berlin and Vienna. These cities have numerous hospitals teeming with suffering humanity. Groups of students from the various colleges under the Professors of the world teach and practice here, and the institutions are everywhere a medical knowledge and experience. With a view of making this experience available to the public the Hospital Remedy Co. at great expense secured the prescriptions of these hospitals, prepared the specifics, and although it would cost from $25 to $100 to secure the attention of a distinguished originator of the medicine, the price of the quack patent medicines that flood the market and clutter it with every ill from a single bottle.

LOCAL ITEMS.

The Napanee newspapers now charge ten cents a line for church and societies notices.

There is some talk of a company being formed here to go into the dressed beef business.

Shopkeepers are investing in elaborate awnings this spring, a sure indication of a hot summer.

Evan MacColl, the Celtic bard, departed from Kingston yesterday to make his home in New York.

A large run has been subscribed for the new club house proposed to be erected by the Deseronto Canoe and Boating Club.

The Brown Manufacturing Company Belleville are doing a rushing business, the men working overtime to fill orders.

The roads in the surrounding country have been most wretched this spring. The hilly portions are reported to be worse than others.

Chicken thieves are operating in the east end. Some of these gentlemen are known and may yet find themselves in the Central prison.

Another batch of ugly paint-consuming front fences have been taken down during the past week. The front fence will soon be a thing of the past as far as Deseronto is concerned.

The Liberal-Conservative Committees of each polling-division in Thurlow, Tyendinaga and Deseronto will meet at the Intelligencer office, Belleville, on Saturday, 19th inst., at 1 o'clock, p. m.

Mr. A. E. Gracey has a hen which has made herself a record by the number and size of the eggs she lays every season. Recently she cackled over four large eggs measuring 7 1/2x6 1/2, 7 1/2x6 1/2 and 7 1/2x6 1/2 inches.

Dr. Vandervoort, chairman of the Board of Health, writes a well timed letter this week on the necessity of people paying proper attention to their walk. The contents of this thoughtful communication should receive due attention.

A suit of clothes were left hanging out all night recently in front of one of the stores in town. They were found all right next morning. It is not worth while, it seems, to steal clothing when a whole suit can be purchased for three or four dollars.

An ingenious swindle is booming in several counties, which a fountain pen with a double load plays an important part. The pen carries two kinds of ink, one of which will fade, the other will not. The superior parts of a contract are written in the ink which fades, and the farmer's signature with the permanent, and the document finally figures as a note of hand, which is discounted at the nearest bank and the farmer has to pay.

A Successful Pupit.
Miss Jessie Mackie gained the prize presented by Principal Cole to the pupil in the senior department of the public school who should make the highest mark at the recent Easter examination. The prize was a handsome copy of "The Monastery" by Sir Walter Scott.

Killed at Gananoque.
Jess Seymour, while shovelling shingles off the roof of a warehouse in Gananoque owned by the Rathbun company, fell off, reference to a distance of twenty feet, alighting on his head. He was instantly killed. He was a well-known violin player and a good organist. He leaves a wife and large family.

Old Newspapers.
Mr. James H. McHenry, of Kingsford, after overhauling some packages came across a number of old newspapers, among others copies of the Weekly Star, of Montreal, dated August and September 1845, and the Evening Mail, of Dublin, of April 14, 1845. The questions which are the forefront in the columns of these old journals are much the same as those discussed by Canadian and Irish journals today, forty years after these dates, viz: the action of the education department in Ontario in reference to the schools, college, a branch of the grants to Maynooth college, a branch of the home rule controversy. There appears to be nothing new under the sun as far as politics are concerned.

The Umpire Sentenced.
Albert, Herman and Geo. Lloyd were brought into court last week to receive sentence for the crime of rape committed about Mary Denton, of which they were convicted at the assizes in April, 1889. When to say why the sentence which they had anything not be passed upon them, each made an address stating that they had been in the prison for a long period and asked to be dealt leniently. George stated that he was guilty of the offence, Albert, who only acted as a witness in the performance of the crime, was sentenced to one day in gaol. Geo. and Herman were sentenced to hard labour for a period of 7 years in the Kingston penitentiary. —Intelligencer.

Casualties.

David Beyette had his hand very severely cut in the Big Mill on Monday of last week. Wm. Hull, of the messenger staff, had one of his fingers bruised one day last week.

The Franchise.

Young men who desire to have their names on the voters list should call at the office of Mr. John McCullough, assessor, and inform that official who will be only too happy to comply with their request. No one entitled to a vote should neglect this duty.

Glorifying in Tribulation.

"I liked that open-air meeting on the Hay Market, and almost wished for some such meetings in Toronto. A few jeering drunken women and sundry men calling you names, with various missiles flying around you to make an open-air meeting particularly interesting. I hear the candidates had a little taste of it last Sunday. Thus writes a Salvation Army officer to the War Cry.

A Great Order.

On January first, 1889, there were 652,787 members in the Independent Order of Oddfellows and 688,492 in the Manchester Unity, making a grand total of 1,341,279 members, or fully one-quarter of a million more than reported by the next largest civilized secret society. The invested funds on January 1st, 1888, amounted to $34,032,025. The sick and funeral benefits paid in 1887 were $3,333,184.

Thrown out of Court.

The case of Wesley Bullen vs. McCullough and Gynny came up for trial in Belleville on the 15th inst. In this case Bullen, a Belleville liquor dealer, attempted to recover fine and costs which he claims were illegally imposed upon him. Mrs. Belford, for the defendant, took several preliminary objections with the result that the judge held that the first point raised was fatal and dismissed the case with costs including counsel's fees. The case may be brought on again in another way.

The Varuna.

The steamer Varuna with colors flying and wearing a more saucy appearance than ever called at the dock last Saturday morning on his first trip to Picton. Capt. Porte, who has equipped himself during the winter with a fresh stock of stories, looked not a day older than when he was frozen in at Trenton last fall. He has given his steamer a complete overhauling, and thoroughly painted her. The wheel has been lowered with the result that she can make even better time than formerly. Reuben Marcross is engineer. The Varuna leaves Deseronto for Picton at 10:20 a. m.; and for Belleville and Trenton at 2:30 p. m.

Uncle Tom's Cabin.

Mr. George Burtch has been busy of late preparing to take the road with his Uncle Tom's Cabin Company. In organizing this company for the season Mr. Burtch has spared no pains or expense in securing the services of the best people in the profession. Among some of the most popular we may mention the following: Miss Lettie Wright, leading lady, now with N. S. Woods "Out in the Street" Company; Howard's Athenaeum, Boston; Miss M. H. P. Balmer and Mrs. H. P. Balmer, Chicago; Tony P. Mason, Buffalo; Harry Williams, comedian, Syracuse, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Ockerman and Nettie Thompson, of Rochester, and several other excellent artists. The Grand Opera House orchestra, of Toronto, will be with the Company this season, a fact which of itself must prove a great attraction. The Band will surpass any ever seen here before. The wagons have been handsomely painted; the canvas is largely new, and the scenery also has been newly painted, so that the outfit is complete and of first class in every respect. Mr. Burtch intends going east this season. He will give his opening performance at North Fredericksburg on May 3rd and will be at Napanee on May 5th; Deseronto 6th; and Kingston, 7th.

TO THE CITIZENS OF DESERONTO.

At this season of the year allow me to call your attention to the importance of having your wells thoroughly cased. It is well known fact that cholera, typhoid fever, gastro-intestinal diseases, etc., are traceable to impurities in drinking water, and therefore no such caution cannot be taken in this important matter.

The Board of Health has the authority to enforce the cleansing of all wells before the 1st of July each year. They can also order the filling in of any well in which there is found any poisonous matter which might propagate disease.

Each well should be tightly closed up about the curb to prevent the influx of surface water. It should also be pumped or dipped out, the walls washed down, and the whole disinfected. Closets should be placed as far away as practicable and no decaying animal or vegetable matter should be allowed to remain upon the premises as the poison from this might permeate the soil and find an entrance into the well.

As our town is very compact and we have no system of sewers I hope every one will see the importance of this communication.

E. D. VANDERVOORT,
Chairman, Board of Health.

FARM, FIELD AND GARDEN.

EVERY DAY TOPICS CONSIDERED IN A PLAIN, PRACTICAL MANNER.

The Importance of Diversified Farming Demonstrated—Reasons Why the Fortunes of the Season Ought Not to Be Staked on One or Two Crops.

Too much stress can scarcely be laid upon the importance of raising a variety of crops, and not staking all upon a favorite one, which, by a failure caused by an unfavorable season, may occasion a loss that few farmers are able to bear. One of the reasons usually assigned for the favor of their occupation is that, although not a money-making one, it is a safe business if properly conducted. It not only affords a good living without the liabilities attending most business callings, but, by slow accumulations, will in time compare favorably in its results with other occupations that are commonly deemed more lucrative. In all sections of the country, the most successful crops, adapted to the soil and climate, to which more than ordinary attention may be given, but as a general rule the fortunes of the season should not be staked on one or two crops. If corn, wheat, oats and potatoes are the chief staples, there is no probability that the season will be so unfavorable that none will succeed. One or more of these may suffer, while the others do exceedingly well, and thus compensate for a partial deficiency in the whole. Wealthy capitalists in the northwest may hazard all on the success of single crops of wheat, but to the average farmer this method of safety is an important one that should not be disregarded. He may not handle as much money as one may do in favorable seasons with special crops, but of the end he is quite sure, and he will have a real profit as the man who grows only one leading crop. Of our grain crops, corn is by far the most trustworthy, and while we may have seasons in which the crop may prove unprofitable, its adaptability to all soils and climates makes it one that no farmer, either north or south, can afford to omit.

Nowhere have the advantages of diversified farming been better demonstrated than in the south. There, as elsewhere, cotton will continue to be the money crop; but it has been learned that a successful cotton crop means one whose avals are not to be used up in paying for plant food and special care, and that the best way to insure a successful crop is to be being produced. Again, in both north and south, a new species of farming, of which the old agriculturists know little or nothing, has come into vogue, and that farming, as it is called, often yields profits that are almost equal to those of the staple crops as in many districts to cause most of the latter to be abandoned for market gardening. Indeed, it may be said that the methods of farming successfully have changed so much within a few years as to almost make it a different occupation, and the man who persists in farming the same way his father did twenty years ago has good reasons for saying the business does not pay, say the farmers of the New York World, authority for the above.

Bleaching Beeswax.
The query, "Which is the best and quickest way to bleach common yellow beeswax?" was recently submitted to leading beekeepers for answer in American Bee Journal.

Dadant & Son replied: "Put it in the sun in thin strips, when the sun is hot enough to melt it. Some yellow wax never bleaches."

G. W. Demaree said: "I have given very little attention to the art of bleaching beeswax. There, as elsewhere, ago, bleached beeswax by making it in thin cakes and exposing them to the sun and dew."

Mrs. L. Harrison answered: "Make it into thin sheets and bleach it with sun and dew, just as manila is bleached. A lady at Rahway, N. J., accumulated quite a little fortune at bleaching wax a few years since."

J. E. H. Brown said: "A good plan is to sheet it and then expose the sheets to a strong light."

A. B. Mason advised making the wax in thin sheets, keeping moist and exposing to the hot sun for a few weeks.

The Cheapest Egg Food.
The cheapest egg food in winter and most complete in the proportions of nitrogen, carbon and mineral matter, says the editor of Egg and Farm, is a mixture of clover chopped into half inch lengths and scalded in corn meal and bran. The ration supplies bulky food (or an equivalent of green food), promotes digestion and costs less than any other food. It affords a variety, and does not give acid. Experiments show that as long as the hens are kept in exercise, corn may be fed liberally, but though one may attribute all the beneficial effects to corn, yet the amount of food of a various kind picked up by the hens in winter is greater than when they are supposed, especially if they have access to the barn yard, as they will pick up clover leaves, leaves, the blades of corn, fodder and other foods required.

A Dairy Experience.
A Vermont dairyman thus expresses himself in Rural New Yorker: "My dairy experience does not extend over a long period, and has consisted principally in changing a 100 pound per cow dairy to a 25 pound per cow dairy. I have been getting rid of the older cows and raising up a herd of Jerseys. The best cow I own is a Jersey and the only old cow in the herd was a 'No. 1' when a heifer and still continues to be. Some old rut following farmers probably object to 25 pound cows because they wear out more rapidly than for keeping in the old way. I heard the other day of a man who did not like the Jerseys because they did not make enough milk for his hog. He wanted cows that made lots of milk!"

Early hatched chickens bring the best price, and bring in money at a time when you need it.

THE AYRSHIRE COW.

Rapid Development of This Breed Throughout the Dairy Regions of the World. The Ayrshire cow now ranks very high as to both quality and quantity of its produce. A fair average of herds of say fifty cows, not especially selected, runs from 640 to 680 gallons of milk per annum, according to an excellent authority as Mark Lane Express, which furnishes an interesting account of the recent development of this breed.

At present, the Ayrshire cow generally shows 13 per cent of solids, 13 to 16 per cent of cream, and 34 to 41 per cent of butter fat. In the milkings of the London dairy show and the Oxfordshire show, the Ayrshire has been stepped far ahead of the Shorthorns, Guernseys, etc., in the quantity and quality of the milk which they yielded.

The milk of the Ayrshire is peculiarly suited for cheese making. All samples of milk under the microscope are seen to be composed of a homogeneous fluid, in which both little globules of butter fat and the curd are very small and while in the Jersey they are comparatively large, in the Ayrshire they are small and not rising quickly, but, mixing with the curd, make an evenly rich curd. The quantity of cheese yielded by such animal is about six hundredweight, estimated in so many stones of twenty-four pounds each.

As to the butter yielding properties of the Ayrshire dairy cow, the ordinary milk shows about 4 to 4 1/2 per cent of butter fat, while selected animals come up to, if they do not exceed, the Jerseys. The average yield, so far as records go, is not so high as about 340 pounds per annum. The writer has had recently tested a 4-year-old Ayrshire cow, which is yielding fifteen pounds of butter per week.

It is customary with some breeders of cattle to speak disparagingly of the Ayrshire from a butcher's point of view. We venture, however, to maintain that of all the races of milk producing animals, she is the best and most profitably bred for the purpose. The milk makes it one that no farmer, either north or south, can afford to omit.

The development of this breed within the past fifty years has been very marked and rapid. The Ayrshire cow is fast superseding other dairy races in England. She grazes innumerable dairy farms in Holland, has crossed the wide Atlantic, and feeds along the northern as well as the southern shores of the river St. Lawrence and rests beneath the shadows of the Rocky mountains. Possessed of the best and sweetest woolly coat of any animal, she has lately been extensively imported to the stormy regions of Russia, and at present she is unquestionably the favored dairy animal of Australia and New Zealand.

Facts Worth Noting.
Plenty of whitewash should be used, not only for the brighter appearance, but also as a disinfectant. Hot whitewash will kill the germs of disease. Flies, poultry houses and pig quarters will aid in preventing vermin and insects.

The Ralfe apple, a month later than the Greenstein, is highly recommended by Maine pomologists.

To have a gentle cow it is well to begin handling her when she is a calf. Especially in the case of a cow that is necessary when a cow has her first calf, a bad habit contracted at that time will be hard to break up.

In buying fertilizers there is now but little danger of being deceived in their composition. The numerous analyses of the various brands of fertilizers made by the state experiment stations exist for their constituents and serve as a protection to both manufacturers and purchasers.

How It Was Explained.
An irascible old gentleman shuffled down four flights of stairs in the Colonade every morning and over to the desk. His eyes glared, his white hair stuck up like a circular comb all around his head, his necktie and collar were engaged in a catch-as-catch-can bout and his whole frame shook with rage. The old gentleman's prominent railroad operator of Denver. He asked a handful of footpicks from the desk and scattered them on the floor. Back of the desk stood Mr. Clerk Rooney perusing a hymn book.

"I say," shouted the Denver man, "Something's the matter on the fifth floor! Somebody up there is raising Cain; coughing, wheezing, ringing bells, buzzing machinery and waking me up at 8 o'clock!"

Mr. Rooney put a poker chip in the hymn book to retain his place, and from force of habit called out: "Front!"

"I don't want any boloney," continued the Denver man. "What I want is satisfaction, sir."

"Ah, yes," replied the clerk, waving the boloney into the perspective. "I'm very sorry," he continued, "but we must not do business with this disturbance!"

"Gimme a clue!"

"Ah, sir, the man who disturbed you is not to blame. He is here under the care of a physician. In 1876, when a small boy, he swallowed a fire alarm, and every time he coughs this goes off like a fourth of July celebration. He has undergone eighteen surgical operations, and this last is successful. The doctors have just left with the fire alarm and the patient is being cared for."

"By whom?"

"By an undertaker, sir."

The Denver man leaned against a pillar and hummed: "I wish I was an angel." Mr. Rooney, whose own influenza pills and took up his hymn book. A bystander said:

"Say, Rooney, what is the trouble, anyhow?"

"Nothing," he was putting in some new electric bells, that's all!" Philadelphia Press.

HORSES' FEET.

Claims Made by an Experienced Shoer.
Advice Worthily of Consideration. An experienced shoer claims, in The New York Tribune, that most ill shaped feet were so the first time the horse was taken to the shop. Several in his own hands have the feet of the colts, trimmer and he never saw an imperfect foot on one of them. Colts are born with perfect feet. Nature intended them to be so. If they did, their hoofs would wear away evenly, but, instead, they are kept indoors five months of the year; the hoofs become long and break off in pieces from time to time.

If a considerable piece breaks off at the side the foot runs over like an old boot, and the colt acquires the habit of walking partially on the side of the foot, which is very difficult to remedy. Sometimes both sides break off, leaving the too unnaturally long, thus throwing more weight on the heels, causing the horse to limp. The colt's feet vary in shape, and while in the Jersey they are comparatively large, in the Ayrshire they are small and not rising quickly, but, mixing with the curd, make an evenly rich curd. The quantity of cheese yielded by such animal is about six hundredweight, estimated in so many stones of twenty-four pounds each.

MANY A LIFE

HAS been saved by the prompt use of Ayer's Pills. Travelers by land or sea are liable to constipation or other derangements of the stomach and bowels, which, if neglected, lead to serious and often fatal consequences. The most sure means of correcting these evils is the use of Ayer's Pills. The president sailing-master would as soon go to sea without his chronometer as without a supply of these pills. They are prompt and energetic in operation. Ayer's Pills leave no ill effects; they are purely vegetable and sugar-coated; the safest medicine for old and young, at home or abroad.

"For eight years I was afflicted with constipation, which at last became so bad that the doctors could do me no more. Then I began to take Ayer's Pills, and soon the bowels recovered their natural and regular action, so that now I am in Excellent health."—Mrs. C. E. Clark, Tewksbury, Massachusetts.

"I regard Ayer's Pills as one of the most reliable general remedies of our time. They have been in use in my family for ailments requiring a purgative, and have given unvarying satisfaction. We have found them to be a most reliable remedy for colds and light fevers."

W. R. Woodson, Fort Worth, Texas.

"I have found Ayer's Cathartic Pills to be a better family medicine for constipation than any other pills within my knowledge. They are not only very effective, but safe and pleasant, and—qualities which must make them valued by the public."—Julius Haezel, Fortner, Philadelphia, Pa.

Mr. Wm. Bowen, Jr., has been erecting a verandah and making other improvements on his house on the Napanee road.

Dr. C. E. Hubbs has been already selling this season's strawberries, tomatoes, watercress, spinach, onions, etc.

Intelligence was received here that Mrs. Bell, wife of Mr. H. E. Bell, photographer, formerly of this place, had died last week at Westport.

The cases brought against the Deseronto Navigation Company at the Pictou assizes this week have been postponed to the autumn court.

A special meeting of Court Deseronto, Independent Order of Foresters, will be held in their Chambers on the evening of Wednesday, 4th inst.

Mr. Vm. T. Holdcroft, B. A., M. D., of Tweed, who lately graduated from the Royal Medical College at Kingston, spent Monday at home.

Mr. Godfrey Colp has the painters busy giving a fresh coat of paint to his properties on St. George street. Mr. Colp believes in progress and improvement.

The dust was drifting along main street for several days during the past week. It is time that the town council grappled with the street sprinkling question.

Hon. A. M. Ross, Treasurer of Ontario, has signified his intention of retiring from political life. It is supposed there will be a reconstruction of the cabinet.

All young men and others interested who desire to have their names added to the roll of the Belleville and Marysville, the 1st, of May on Mr. John McCullough, assessor.

The Beaver Base Ball Club has been organized, with James Gault, Captain, and John Jamieson, Secy-Treasurer. They play the Shannonville nine on the 24th of May.

Mr. T. Caughlin will act as foreman on some of the double track operations between Belleville and Marysville. Mr. Caughlin is well known as a competent railway man.

A ghost has been seen on Centre street. The appearance of this visitor from the spirit world has caused considerable excitement. The general elections must be near.

Commissioner Marrigan has laid down a piece of good board walk on Centre street near Mr. Dunning's residence. The old sidewalk with its hatter trimmings will soon be a thing of the past.

The driving park fence, injured by the tornado of last winter, has been all properly set up and braced, and is in good condition. The main entrance to the park will in future be from Thomas street.

The St. George street quail club opened the season by a grand tournament on Tuesday afternoon. Mr. J. J. Kerr carried off honors defeating such well known champions as Caughlin and Laypp.

The Rathbun Company have a large fleet of vessels engaged carrying ice to Charlotte. The barges Mills and Sherman cleared Wednesday with over a thousand tons each. The barge towed them to Macdonald's Cove.

Miss Clara Hobson, a young lady of 18 years of age, died from that fell disease consumption, on Wednesday. The remains were conveyed to Pictou on the Deseronto this morning for interment in the cemetery at Black Creek.

Isaac Brant was arrested by Chief Genvoy Wednesday for intoxication, and appeared before Justice McCullough yesterday when he was sentenced to one day in jail for each offence.

Medea E. R. Northmore, G. J. Carter and J. D. Watson were summoned to Fleisherton, Co. Grey, last week by the death of their sister, Mrs. Hector Boulton. This was the second time in two years that the death of another loved sister. The deceased left three young children.

Mr. Thomas Rayburn, an aged and respected resident of this district, died yesterday afternoon at his residence on the bay shore, Tyndings. Deceased was the father of Mr. Richard Rayburn, of the Deseronto Flour Mills. The funeral takes place to Deseronto cemetery at 10 a. m. on Saturday morning.

Mrs. Arthur who with her husband occupied a house near the corner of Dundas and Church street, Belleville, was burned to death on Wednesday night. It is supposed an overturned lamp caused the fire. All efforts to rescue her failed and she was burned to a crisp. Mr. Arthur was rescued with difficulty. Mrs. Arthur was fifty nine years of age and a native of Ireland.

We are assured that there is an unusual amount of gambling done in town, and that the money is constantly changing hands. There are five or six well known resorts for this purpose. About half a dozen gamblers manage to make a living by this means. No vice is more calculated to steal the heart against all good influences.

The owners of fast horses in town held their annual spring races on Wednesday on two of the principal streets kindly loaned to them, we presume, by the town council. Pedestrians showed wonderful dexterity in dodging the racers by skipping alertly over the street crossings. Now that there is a convenient driving park with a good course which can be used for a very moderate fee, it would be just as well for proprietors of fast steeds to train their animals there and thus avoid risk of injuring their horses, not to mention the long suffering racers.

Mr. James Marrigan left on Monday morning for Nova Scotia where he resumes work on the Chignecto marine railway.

Mr. S. G. Chamberlain, the popular agent of the Canada Life Assurance Company, is in town. Over $2,500 in profits will be distributed this year among policy holders in the Deseronto agency alone.

A Good Catch. On Monday the teamster of the Flour Mill secured with the aid of a pike pole, in taking out of the bay a "finnan-haddie" which weighed 54 pounds. This is an uncommon catch in the Bay of Quinte.

The Weather. The weather has been clear and dry, only a few drops of rain having fallen during the week. Farmers are very busy with their spring operations, the conditions for work being favourable. As the birds are now chiefly from the north, vegetation is not yet very verdant.

Donations. Mr. Denton Delmage, D. D. S., of Toronto University, has entered upon the practice of his profession in Deseronto, his office being in the portion of the residence of Mr. L. Hull, Jr., St. George street. Dr. Delmage comes with high testimonials as a skillful dentist.

Found to be Bay. On Saturday Wesley Tompkins, Wm. Green and John Brant fished along the bay the carcass of a horse with harness and luggage attached. After much labor they managed to detach the horse and harness which are now in the yard of the Empress hotel awaiting an owner.

Fast Meetings Consecutive. The Hastings will meet in convention at Eastport, at one o'clock, p.m. on Tuesday, May 6th, 1890, for the purpose of selecting a candidate for the legislative assembly. Mr. Birmingham, of Toronto, and other prominent speakers will be present. A full representation from all parts of the riding is requested.

Feast of Days. The ladies of the Steady Cleaners' Society of the Presbyterian Church intend holding a "Feast of Days" in Union Hall on Wednesday, May 14th, 1890, at 10 o'clock. This entertainment is one of the kind ever held in Deseronto, and the ladies have been busy for some time making elaborate preparations. They will have a large number of useful and ornamental articles for sale at moderate prices. The various booths will be most attractively decorated, and a grand success is ensured.

War Cry Battle. The local corps of the Salvation Army will hold a great War Cry Battle on the 26th of April to the 6th of May. A grand time is expected, as there will be a special edition of the War Cry to sell. Major Baugh, of Kingston, was at the meeting last night. The Army is prospering under Lt. Davidson, who regrets that pressure of duties prevents his being present. Six converts were lately made, and the children's meetings are very successful. Capt. Cardiff is gradually regaining strength at Toronto.

Building Operations. Mrs. James Wilson is building a new house on the south side of Dundas street, opposite her present residence. It will be frame 40x25 feet with kitchen 13x30 feet. James Heaton is also building on his farm, Napanee road. His new house will be brick 17x23 ft. with kitchen 12x18 ft. Methodist Church. Rev. A. Campbell preached a forcible sermon Sunday morning in the Methodist Church, taking as his subject "The Superiority of Religion over all Earthly Things."

The choir showed evidence of excellent training and by the time the service was over the congregation was hearty and general. He observed that the users were possessed of "map" and seated the people with promptitude. The pastor announced that the last quarterly meeting before conference, and consequently before his departure to another charge, would be held on Sabbath, May 4th. All members are invited to attend the next Sabbath in order to secure their tickets.

Pleasure at the Helm. "Fair laughs the morn, and soft the zephyr blows," thus sang three young ladies of the high school, who, charpered by a fair teacher of the public school, embarked last Saturday morning on one of Naylor's boats to row over and inspect the remains of the late John Wilson, who died on the 1st of May. The bay was smooth as glass and the trip was made in safety. After moralizing over the evanescence of all earthly things as exemplified by the destruction of the proud vessel, the pretty crew started for home, but, all at once, the "weeping willow" arose and Mowhawk Bay assumed a tempestuous appearance. The waves ran high and threatened to swamp their frail craft. Nerved by despair they bent to their oars with a will, and one of the young ladies was possessed of rare strength of arm as a result of calisthenics practice, they waded across the length in reaching land. Their pale faces are gradually recovering their wonted color.

Cedar Mill. The Cedar Mill, after being shut down three days for repairs, started off again in splendid repair, and is now running as busy and well managed establishment which gives employment to a large number of workmen. As a forerunner, the staff is about the same as it was last year. Mr. Thos. Roach, Jr., is superintendent of this important mill. E. H. Cooke is yard foreman, with J. Hible and T. Hingley, assistants. Chas. Dryden is foreman on the docks with E. Brault and W. Stratton foremen. S. C. W. Wilson is foreman in the big circular department. C. Cronk in the department. Wm. LOVE'S HANDS.

A LEGEND OF PENNSACOLA—BY MAURICE THOMPSON.

(Copyright. All rights reserved.)

The 17th day of September, 1719, dawned on the bay of Pensacola with a slight fog, dim and gray, hovering over the water and fringing with fantastic trailing eddies the shores of the island. The fort on the hill behind the town loomed up quite grandly and showed the projecting muzzles of its heavy guns, while the fleet in the bay and the earthworks on the island gave an appearance of great military strength to the little Spanish post. Doubtless a feeling of perfect security possessed the garrison, for there was no sign of unusual vigilance, albeit on the morning before some Indian runners had come in to assure them that the French were advancing by both land and sea.

The commandant at Pensacola was not aware that the Comte de Champmeslin had re-enforced Bienville's little army at Mobile with a fleet of three ships of the line, nor that a strong force of Indians had been induced to join in an expedition against the Spanish by land. The military discipline was kept up in a perfunctory way, while both the officers and men of the Spanish garrison gave themselves over to the dreamy and relaxing influence of the climate. Whose and bustle of soldiery making ready for battle.

Cortes pressed one long kiss upon Pauline's lips and rushed forth to do his duty, leaving the dazed and trembling girl standing in the middle of the room. The first of the Comte de Champmeslin had sailed into the bay and was pouring broadside after broadside against the slight works on the island, while at the same time Bienville, at the head of 600 men, was launching by land to attack the fort on the hill behind the town.

The Dona Hortense, very little excited by an experience not in the least new to her, came into the room and put her motherly arms around Pauline. The girl returned the caress with a fervor born of the emotion that was making wild tumult in her breast. To her every cannon shot as it belled and boomed told a sweet story of hope and love. She fancied that it was Louis that was firing every gun; she even imagined that she could hear his voice, vague and far, but clear and sweet above the general din, calling to her to come courage.

"He is coming! He is here!" she cried with her hand on the don's shoulder. "Be quiet, my child," was the calm answer; "we cannot know what may be the end of this."

She went to the window and looked out to see the heavy ships drawing in toward the town and firing as they came. The Spanish fleet was at anchor close to the main land shore in such a position that its guns were unavailable. Soon enough the battery on the hill in the direction of the fort on the hill.

The don recognized the battle yell of the Indians who were fighting under Bienville. She had heard among the cry before, and knew well its meaning. "The Holy Virgin shield us if they succeed," she murmured, showing excitement for the first time.

"Oh, but they must succeed, they must not fail!" cried Pauline. "And see! the ships are taking down their colors—the French have won! Oh, Louis! Louis!"

In the hysteria of her joy she turned and ran out of the house and down the little street toward the strand.

Boats well manned were putting out from the French vessels to come ashore. Meantime the firing at the fort on the hill was thick and heavy, and the Indian allies of Bienville were making the air hissing with their yelling.

Pauline had been lying abroad in Pensacola, and there, such as they were, were quite unfamiliar to her. She had run forth without any definite object in view, though a vaguely outlined thought of finding Louis Duke among the sailing soldiers was certainly uppermost in her mind. The don followed her, but so swiftly did she fly she was soon out of sight.

"Oh, my poor, poor child," wailed the old woman, stopping all out of breath and wringing her hands.

While she stood there Capt. Cortes, leading a small body of men, approached her. The intrepid young officer, seeing that his vessel must fall into the enemy's hands, had hurried his crew into the small boats and brought them ashore with a view to taking possession of a small block house in the upper part of the town.

"You here!" she exclaimed with the bluntness and sternness of authority. "And where is Mlle. Pauline?"

"I have come, mademoiselle," he began at once, speaking in the manner of one who acts under the force of ill-suppressed emotion with the necessity of haste upon him. "I have come to do what I cannot help doing, what I have struggled not to do, but what cannot be resisted. Mademoiselle, I love you." In the old knightly style he went down upon his knees, his sword clanking against the floor. "What word have you for me, mademoiselle? Speak and let me live or die."

"Mademoiselle, come with me." "She is gone! I do not know where she ran away—Oh! Oh!" moaned the trembling and weeping woman. "Gone!" he echoed. "Gone! which way? Where? Tell me—be quick!"

Dona Hortense simply lifted her hands and closed them over her ears, as if to shut out the dreadful sound of the fighting. The earth seemed to rock and palpitate; the air was sulphurous with the drifting fumes of powder smoke.

"Yonder is the young lady," exclaimed one of the men, pointing with his outstretched hand. Pauline was standing in the middle of the little street, apparently bewildered. Her head was bare and her long bright hair was floating on the wind. She was an apparition to make a man forget battle and danger to death. Cortes ran to her and laid his hand on her arm.

"Mademoiselle," he said, very firmly, but with infinite tenderness, "come with me." Then he turned to his men and bidding them follow, he started toward the block house.

Suddenly he thought of the don. Dejectedly he returned at the moment, but he halted again and sent a man to bring the old woman, who still stood weeping where he had left her.

As the little company resumed its march toward the block house, a great increase of the din was observable up to the fort and at the same time a body of men came charging down the street that ran from the hill to the beach of the bay. This was a small detachment of French soldiers, headed by a tall young officer, who swung his sword around his head and encouraged his followers by his head, viracous example and spirit.

"Oh, Louis! Louis! Louis!" they heard her cry out. "Here I am! Come! Come!" Did the French officer really hear duty they lounged in picturesque groups under the grateful shade of the trees, or sought the rude amusements offered by the low and dingy houses of the town?

To Pauline life grew more irksome and depressing day by day. After the interview recorded in the foregoing chapter she saw no more of Cortes for a long time. The Dona Hortense, after exhausting every means in her power to distract the girl's thoughts from the subject of going to Mobile, had given over the task of thinking and indulging in the very feelings whose orders prohibited such indulgence.

To Pauline life grew more irksome and depressing day by day. After the interview recorded in the foregoing chapter she saw no more of Cortes for a long time. The Dona Hortense, after exhausting every means in her power to distract the girl's thoughts from the subject of going to Mobile, had given over the task of thinking and indulging in the very feelings whose orders prohibited such indulgence.

"Your daughter," he was fond of saying, "is a fine girl, a model of dutifulness and gratitude. Just see how she honors all your wishes."

"She is a girl, Alphonso, as I was once a girl. She has seen a man to love, as I did. He has beckoned, as you did, and she would follow, as did I. We you tell me how much I honored my mother's wishes when?"

"Not much when you married me. That is true," he interrupted with a laugh which was devoid of mirth. "But after all have you not found that?"

"Perhaps then Pauline might do fairly well if she could go to her lover." "Let her go to him; her lover is Capt. Cortes."

"She does not love him." "Well, but she ought to love him; her life is his, he snatched it from the very jaws of death. It is base ingratitude, it is soulless perfidy, in her to reject him."

"You do not understand women." "Yes, I understand them. This is no very rare instance of their utter lack of a high sense of obligation. Every dictate of conscience, every impulse of unselfishness would force a high souled woman in Pauline's place to give herself to her lover who so nobly earned the right to her love."

"But she loves another." "Loves another? There is the gross selfishness I spoke of. She is thinking all the time of herself. That's the way with a woman. True gratitude, noble unselfishness would address itself to considering the happiness of her chivalrous and brave deliverer. All she cares for, however, is to gratify her own love."

"And what a terrible mistake she sometimes makes by so doing!" "Granted," said Don Alphonso, rising and making a superb obeisance before his wife. He took his departure without further remark.

Pauline was compelled to overhear most of this conversation as she sat in an adjoining room, and it came just at the moment when it could affect her most strongly. With the swift light of her thoughts flashed back over all the kindness and unselfish nobleness of Cortes, and the words of the old woman took her in his arms amid the boiling waves down to the present, and something like a chill of self-abhorrence ran through her breast. She had not been kind to him, nay, she had been bitterly unkind to him, it now seemed to her. She had been absorbed in herself without room in her heart for any thought, save that of "gratifying her own love." As Don Alphonso had said, how far from home she was, and all alone, with such a burden in her heart! The tension upon her nerves was greater now than at the time when she was clinging to the splintered spar in mid-sea. Again and again the words of young Cortes came to her: "I would sacrifice more than life, I would cast away honor, for you!" His proud, fine, passionate face, with its sudden flash of strange palor after its long and angry, haunted her vision. She had not expected to see him again; but early on the morning of the 17th he came to the house and asked to see her.

She met him with distrust of both herself and him. He was pale and his eyes showed that recently he had been suffering.

"I have come, mademoiselle," he began at once, speaking in the manner of one who acts under the force of ill-suppressed emotion with the necessity of haste upon him. "I have come to do what I cannot help doing, what I have struggled not to do, but what cannot be resisted. Mademoiselle, I love you."

In the old knightly style he went down upon his knees, his sword clanking against the floor. "What word have you for me, mademoiselle? Speak and let me live or die."

"Mademoiselle, come with me." "She is gone! I do not know where she ran away—Oh! Oh!" moaned the trembling and weeping woman. "Gone!" he echoed. "Gone! which way? Where? Tell me—be quick!"

Dona Hortense simply lifted her hands and closed them over her ears, as if to shut out the dreadful sound of the fighting. The earth seemed to rock and palpitate; the air was sulphurous with the drifting fumes of powder smoke.

Pauline could not command herself. She sat silent, the stupor of an overwhelming embarrassment upon her. "I have tried to stay away from you," he went on, "but I have not been able to do it. You have filled my whole life; I can think of nothing but you. Oh, mademoiselle, mademoiselle, do not hate me, do not spurn me when I love you so!"

"I do not hate you, I do not spurn you, Capt. Cortes," she exclaimed, the effort sending a rich sympathetic tingle into her voice. "You have been so noble and so good—you have done so much for me!"

His face took on a look of hope and he reached forth his hand to take hers. In those days melodramatic things did happen. The jarring thunder of a heavy cannon rolled up from the bay and shook the house from roof to foundation. Another and another crash followed by the heavy pounding sound of falling round shot. Cortes was too good a soldier not to respond instantly to the summons of battle. In a moment had sprung to his feet and was standing in a hearkening attitude. Like some perfect actress in a tragedy, more than like a startled girl in real life, Pauline sprang forward and flung out her arms with a cry more of joy than of terror.

"They have come! They are here!" she exclaimed. "They have attacked the town!"

Cortes did not hear her words; he saw only her womanly lovely face and her arms outstretched toward him.

"Darling!" he cried, and clasped her close to his bosom. Again, like the bursting of a thunder storm, the cannons roared out their startling detonations. Trumpets were sounding and in every direction arose the noise of battle.

It appeared so, for with a loud shout he leaped forward and hurled himself with his men upon the now closely marshaled Spaniards. In an instant the battle was on, and the deadly struggle a hand to hand combat with sword and musket butt.

CHAPTER IV. Pauline found herself in the arms of her watchful guardian, the don, who was praying and crying at the same time. They were rudely pressed backward by the recoil of the men when the French detachment struck them at full charge. There was a crash of blades and a volley of horrible oaths mingled with cries of rage and pain. A man came reeling out of the crowd and fell at Pauline's feet, where he writhed, for a moment, with the blood leaping from a wound in his neck, and fell downward, leaving the sand of the street.

The nearest house was a low mud daubed structure, the rudest form of dwelling in use by the colonists. The door stood open with the threshold on the level of the ground. Into this dark room Dona Hortense pushed Pauline, just in time to escape a volley of pistol shots fired by a half dozen of the Frenchmen. The Comte de Champmeslin had run his ships in close to the mainland, and now began raking the town with broadsides at short range. The balls went bounding over the ground and tearing through the frail buildings, with that peculiar suggestion of resistless energy so well remembered by every experienced soldier. The roof overhead was shattered. Down from a long, ragged,agonal rent fell a shower of boards and splinters.

Pauline, strange to say, felt no fear. From the beginning she had been in that numb and bewildered state which often comes upon one in the midst of overwhelming danger. She went to the doorway and looked out. The combatants, French and Spanish, were all mingled together, fighting hand to hand, without pause for discharging or reloading. Blows were falling thick and fast; swords clashed with swords; clubbed blunderbusses rose and fell with such sounds as would, under ordinary circumstances, sicken the strongest heart. She looked out, pressed by a gentle fascination, feeling little of the true horror of the occasion. With the strange double power of the mind at such times she was noting every detail of the struggle before her, while at the same instant she remembered all the series of events by which she had been led to take upon herself this life of incomparable excitement and danger. The vines and garlands of Provence, with the roses and the sunshiny, the shade, the moonlight on the dusky orchards; the church bells and all its sweet incidents and accidents of home life, came upon the field of her vision and shimmered before her, dream-like and yet so real, as the vision of her girlhood's dearest experiences.

Through the roar of cannon and the clangor of swords, above the yelling of wild savages and the oaths of Christians, she heard the bubbling of the wine and the mellow songs of the nightingales in the leafy, odorous closes beyond the Avignon. Sweet words that Louis Duke had murmured in her ear, the pressure of his hand, the betrothal kiss, a thousand touches and sentiments and of gentle romance thrilled her again. And yet there were the pools of blood in the street, red pools that slowly sank away into the sand, and there were the fiercely struggling men, frantically trying fellows as they fought. Strange that the fragrance of the early autumn roses growing and blowing in a neighboring plot should have impressed her senses at such a time, but the sweet breath came over the scene of terrible passion and brought into her consciousness its touch of pleasure despite the awful strain of what she was witnessing.

Louis Duke and Capt. Cortes met face to face and crossed swords near the middle of the little street. The Spaniard knew his man. Pauline's cry of recognition awhile ago had told him who was the swift footed and handsome leader of the French detachment. As for Doucet, he knew nothing more than that an enemy worthy of his steel was before him. A voice that he had heard a few moments before it seemed to him to utter his name with a sweet tenderness that recalled in some strange way the homesickness of his first year of absence from France. It was no time for gentle reflections now; the voice could not really have called him, he thought, and the mere flash of nostalgia passed as quickly as it came. His sword rang sharp and clear on that of Cortes. The two men glared at each other, the concentrated hatred of years of war and hardship burning in their eyes. The meaning of such a look can never fall short of death.

They were well matched in every way. Cortes was a trifle taller, but Doucet appeared rather more compactly built than his adversary. Both were sufficiently heated by previous exertion to make their blood swift and their muscles ready.

No time was lost; the fight was desperate from the beginning, neither combatant at first thinking of anything but pushing upon the leading down the other. Both, however, discovered very soon that it was necessary to have a care for self defense as well as for attack. They fenced furiously and adroitly, neither giving an inch, utterly forgetful of what was going on around them, their whole souls focused, so to speak, in the one desire to kill and, by killing, to live.

Cortes was aware that Pauline was near by and probably looking on. The thought in some way nerved him powerfully. She should not see Louis Doucet vanquished; he would show her that a Spaniard for once was superior to a Frenchman.

Doucet had no such extra stimulus; but his was an iron frame, and his coolness and courage needed no aid when a Spaniard dexter crossed weapons with him. With the dexterity drawn from long practice and with the fierce fury of young tigers thirsting for each other's blood, they struggled back and forth and round and round, each time caught in a snare, fighting quite as madly, swept on down the street, leaving them to occupy the already corpse-cumbered and blood-stained ground. In those days soldiers of the better class knew the use of the sword and were overproud of the knowledge. Under the excitement and exhilaration of a hand to hand combat the accomplished swordsmen always feel that his strength is doubled; but the peculiar circumstances attending the struggle between Cortes and Doucet added immeasurably to this feeling. Each found the other an antagonist whose vigor and swiftness made every moment a crisis, and whose steadfast gaze caught in advance every motion of wrist or body. Cortes, in what may be safely called a subconscious way, recalled in the midst of the fight what he had said to Pauline about sacrificing life, and even the thought of his own death came into his mind at the same time he could see, by indirect vision, just beyond Doucet a dead man lying on the sand in the road. The face was upturned and distorted, the arms outstretched in a futile gesture, the shadow across his brain the thought: "Shall I soon be lying here in that condition?" It was not startling, it was more like an idle wail of suggestion, gone as soon as it came.

Both men became aware presently that the cannonading had ceased and that the rattle of musketry was no longer heard. A great calm had fallen after the storm. The battle was over and the Spaniards, the number of 1,800, had surrendered themselves prisoners of war.

One Spaniard, however, was not yet conquered; one Frenchman was still battling for victory.

Double Track.
About four hundred men are engaged on the Grand Trunk double track between Belleville and Gananoque. Operations are in progress on the rock cutting at Milltown, Shannonville, Napanee, Collins Bay, Kingston Mills and Gananoque Junction. Work has also been commenced on the dirt cuts between Belleville and Milltown.

Notice.
In Deseronto as elsewhere the law in reference to the registration of births, marriages and deaths is treated as a dead letter. As far as the law is concerned it is a virtue, the department has decided to procure all delinquents. As half of the births in Deseronto have not been registered since January 1st, all interested will save themselves heavy costs by attending to this duty forthwith.

Fish Nets Prohibited.
Fish Inspector Chas. Wilkins received instructions from the department at Ottawa authorizing him to prohibit the use of nets
in the bay. Permits were issued last year but the department has decided to stop the use of them entirely. Owners of the fish markets state that the order, if carried out,
will paralyze their business as enough fish cannot be caught by hook and line to supply their trade. —Ontario.

English Barley.
The government, for convenience of prompt distribution, has placed a few cars of prize prolific two-rowed barley, just arrived from England, with The Steele Bros.
Company of Toronto, who are prepared to sell promptly, freight prepaid, to all who remit to them $4 per bag. Each bag contains 112 pounds, and purchasers can obtain any number of bags required. Address
"The Steele Bros. Co., Toronto." —Mail, April 17th.

Death of His Injuries.
G. F. Saxmith, Richmond, seriously injured on Wednesday 16th, in Napanee, in a runaway accident, died Friday morning.
He never became thoroughly conscious. On Wednesday night the doctor raised the lids of his eyes when he recognized his wife, and on Thursday his son spoke to him when he answered by calling him by his name. After the accident he was carried to the Briscoe house. His wife, down the street making purchases, hastened to the hotel. Her girl was unbounded for he had just left him a few minutes before to go and get the horses.

Grand Jury Report.
The grand jury at the recent sittings in their presentment stated that they found 22 prisoners—19 male and 3 female—in the county jail; everything satisfactory and the prisoners classified; a comfortable dwelling house had been provided for the jailer, and they believed there was no better conducted jail in Canada. They praised the management of the deaf and dumb institute, and were favourably impressed with the hospital and home for the aged. They regretted that so many serious offences had come before them for investigation and trusted the epidemic of crime was a thing of the past.

Police Circles.
It will be remembered that some time in February Riley Lloyd and Chas. James raided the cellar and pantry of the Briscoe House, Napanee, carrying off a large quantity of stuff. The two worthies cleared out and hid the police on the lookout for them nothing was seen of either of them until on Monday last, when Lloyd dropped into town and into Chief Ganayo's arms at the same time. The Chief wired to Chief Bell, of Napanee, who took Lloyd down to Napanee where he awaits trial. On Tuesday Chief Ganayo arrested Joseph Beaupre, a young man, who was drunk and disorderly.
The prisoner appeared next morning before the Reeve who was moved by his penitent appearance to let him go with a caution.

A Word to Churches, etc.
Churches, societies, etc., will please remember that the Citizens' Band is ever ready to give its service free at all evening entertainments held under the auspices of the different churches and charitable institutions, provided that ample notice is given and that these entertainments are held on the practice evenings of the Band, and that they do not clash with other entertainments which the Band may have in view. The regular practice meetings of the Band are held on Tuesday and Friday evenings.
When entertainments are held on other evenings than these it is obvious that in order to attend an entertainment the members of the band can only be present at no inconsiderable amount of sacrifice of time, etc.

Methodist Sabbath School Concert.
On Thursday evening, May 1st, the Methodist Sabbath School will hold their third annual concert in the Church. The children, who will furnish the programme, are being thoroughly trained by competent persons, and through their previous entertainments have been excellent. The surpass any heretofore given. The programme will consist of singing by the school, choir,
garden songs by a host of infant scholars,
recitations, dialogues, calisthenics, etc.
Twenty dollars of the proceeds will be taken to make the annual payment on subscription for rebuilding of Church and it is hoped enough will remain for the church lawn.
Admission—five cents for children under twelve years of age; all others 10 cents.
This is the children's concert. They will call to sell you tickets. Buy and make them happy. Attend their concert and you will be delighted with the proceedings.

A Letter from Mexico.
Mr. Walden Hopkins, writing from the city of Mexico, to his brother, Mr. L.
Hopkins, of this place, states that he is enjoying excellent health since his arrival in that famous capital, and that he finds much to interest him in the peculiar habits of the people. He states that Mexico is not advanced in anything, that, in fact, it is only a young, active infant. Everything smacks of primitive days and it will be some time before advancing civilization and its advantages will be fully realized. The natives, in many parts of the country, still break the ground, if they do it at all, with wooden plows, having one handle and drawn by a single ox. Laundry work is done on stones, that is the cleaning part of it. Cooking is accomplished on large brick fire places having holes cut in the brick work, and the pots and other utensils being set over the holes. The city is a gay place, nevertheless, the better class people enjoying in the city to enjoy themselves by driving, riding, promenading, shooting, etc., but the advantages of higher education, and the arts and sciences are lacking. Mr. Hopkins had been out the day before he wrote on a fiery Mexican pony;
he thought he would invest in a horse which would be more than a good look-out, but the pleasure of morning out, and the benefits which would accrue to his health would more than compensate him for this expenditure. It is not improbable that THE TRIBUNE and other Canadian papers may be favoured with some contributions from Mr.
Hopkins concerning that interesting country.

AN ENTERPRISING COW.
ACTON, April 21.—Mr. John Warren, of this neighborhood, is the owner of a Durham
grade cow which gave birth on the 16th inst, to two calves one a Durham grade and the other a Jersey grade. The cow is seventeen years old, and these make sixteen calves, having had the first in 1876. She has now her third pair of horns, having broken the other two pair fighting with other cattle. She was mild, fed and cared for in 1876 by Col. A. H. Warren, now of The Nebraska State Journal, Lincoln, Neb.

CARD.
The members of the Citizens' Musical Association Band desire to express their gratitude to the people of Deseronto for their generous patronage on the occasion of their recent entertainment. They also wish particularly to thank the ladies and gentlemen who so kindly and successfully assisted in filling the numbers on the programme.
